all within the same PowerShell session. As noted above, the script described in this post will execute commands remotely. This is an added security benefit, since it allows you to run commands without actually opening an RDP connection to the remote computer. This script can be run by double-clicking on it, or saved as a .ps1 script and run directly by typing in the command line. How to Use This Script The script is fairly simple to use. Simply add a list of hostnames and IP addresses to the text file "Hosts.txt" on your local machine. Then run the script, and it will create a text file named "Output.txt" with the network name and computer name of each machine in the list. Once you are finished using the script, simply delete the "Hosts.txt" file from your local machine. I've even updated the script to handle IPv6 addresses, and I've recently added an option to log IP addresses as well. If you have a list of hosts to be commanded or a host to be removed, you should check out this post by Steve Wylie.
